A self-styled expert on Cuba who spoke in Mankato this week had a blast at that time for Dr. Jose Miro Cardona, who accompanied his resignation from the Cuban Revolutionary Council Thursday with continued assaults on the Kennedy administration.

Henry Wolf, a former hotel man in Havana who claims up-to-date contacts with displaced Cubans in this country, said Cardona's attack was "not right."

"I believe the President, Secretary of Defense and the head of the CIA are qualified to judge when the moment for action against Cuba is right.

"It's not a question of politics, but a question of believing in your country."

Cardona said there were 14 different groups of Cuban refugees in the country trying to influence United States foreign policy.

"We want communism out of the island . . . and it will happen. But not by creating excitement and screaming for an invasion," Wolf said.

Wolf, who spoke at the Builder Exchange banquet at the Katt ballroom Tuesday night, said Cardona "was a Castro stooge until he fled and was granted asylum here."

Despite the disparity of leadership among the exiled Cubans and their seemingly unifying goal of ousting Castro, Wolf expressed confidence that a relatively stable provisional government could be formed in Cuba should the occasion arise.
